The Basics to Get you Started

by Tomaca Govan

This is just to get anyone started with their own eMusic Marketing campaign. There is so much information on the web on this subject. These are some of the basics. Start here, then go find more and put together a plan of action that will work for you.

Must Haves - The Summary

The internet age is in full swing. How can the indie artist best maneuver to market themselves and their music? And, where does one begin?

1. Have your own website.

- OWN your name or your band's name. It is your brand. This is essential.
- Your website should be appealing to your fans.
- Use wordpress to build your site. There are thousands of templates and plugins to enhance your site and to make it more socially interactive.
- Your domain name comes with email. Use it.

2. Get on Facebook.com

- You want a facebook page that all of your fans can "like" and use to stay in touch with what you are doing.

3. MySpace.com

- MySpace rapidly lost popularity to facebook and other sites, but it is still a good place to share your music and connect with fans.

4. Twitter.com

- Twitter anyone? Yes, twitter everyone.

5. YouTube.com

- Your personal YouTube will be used to upload your videos and to stream them from on other sites.

Your Website

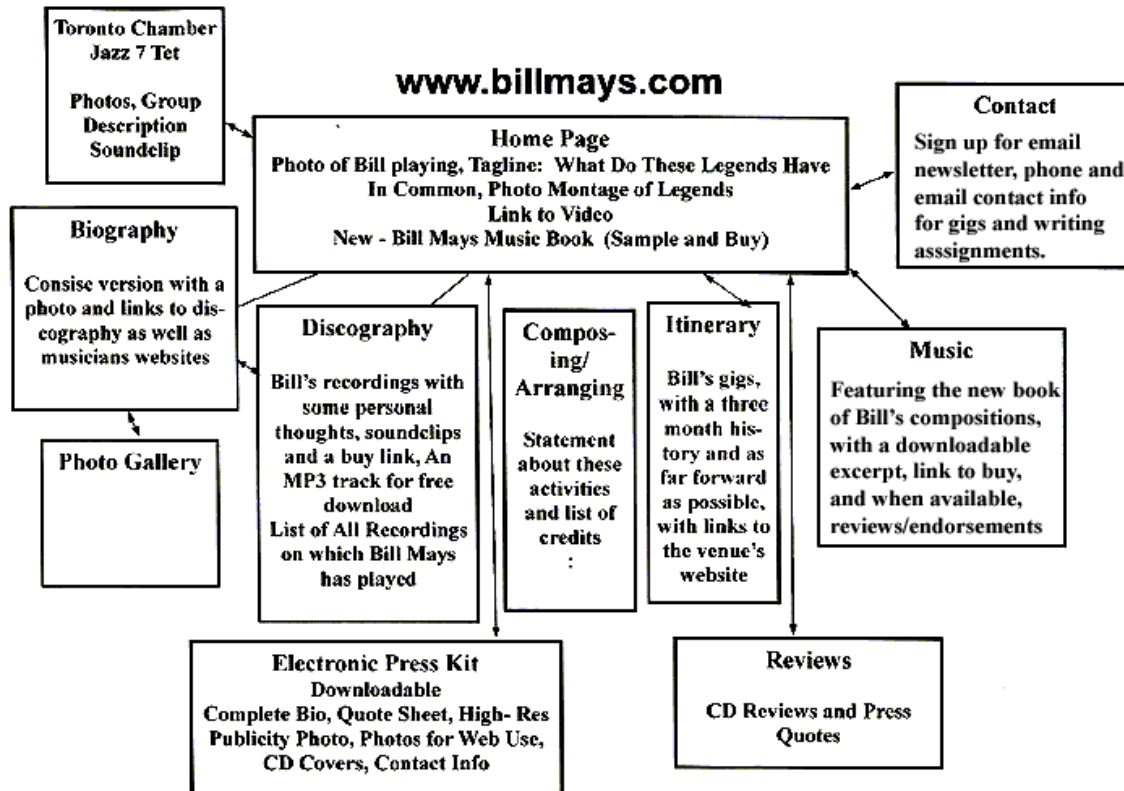

Own Your Name

This starts with owning your name or your band's domain name. This is your company, your corporation, your brand. If people search for your name, you want your own professional website to appear in the search engine. It's the easiest way for people to find you.

If your name is unique, that's even better because you will be at the top of the list. For instance, I am the only Tomaca Govan in the world, so if you search for my name, you will get my sites and not have to filter through other things on the list.

A lot of people get hung up on what is available for free, so they will use a site and have a domain name like <http://wix.com/lamtheband>. Buy lamtheband.com. If you use someone else's name, you are advertising them and they will gladly accept the free endorsement and marketing that you give them. Own your name. Brand yourself!

Here is a good example of the information that should be on your website and how it should flow from BillMays.com:

Giving Your First Impression

In the flesh people get an impression of you within seconds. They see you and decide what kind of person you are and whether or not they are interested in having a conversation. On the internet, it is the same. Three seconds. You may have the greatest music in the world, but if people don't get past the introduction – your website – they will never hear it. Your site needs to be inviting to the viewer and clear and easy to maneuver. If you don't have the money for a designer, there are a number places where you can easily build a website using a provider's software: wix.com, hostbaby.com, bandzoogle.com, bandvista.com, wordpress.org, google.blogspot.

WordPress blogs are my choice for building an interactive site. Many people use WordPress blogs or Joomla to build their websites. Both have thousands of templates and plugins to enhance your website and most of those things are available for free. If you think of a function that you would like your website to have, it's pretty much a given that there is a plugin designed for it.

WordPress blogs are highly interactive enabling your fans to post comments and give feedback just as they can on other social websites and this interaction is what you want. Remember the word "blog." You want to blog and keep people updated to keep a constant buzz.

Use Your Band Email Address

I tell all of my clients – use your band name email address for all of your band-related correspondence. Your business, your company, your band is not @yahoo.com.

Every time you send out an email @lamtheband.com, you are referring people back to your website and you are exhibiting a level of professionalism. Hotmail loves to advertise at the bottom of every email you send out and they will take the free endorsement if you give it to them.

So, you@lamtheband.com. That is who you are, who your company is, your brand. Use it exclusively for all band-related correspondence.

Add a signature line at the bottom your email. This can include your name, phone number, web address and maybe your band's favorite quote if you want to add something a little fun at the end. Remember, with every email you send out, you are marketing yourself.

Facebook

Essential. For marketing purposes, you must be there. Facebook is rapidly becoming the most popular website in the world. Right now, in the US as of 11/2010, it is number 2.

Make a facebook page that your fans can “like.” It's a place people can go to leave you a message, browse through your photo collections, or even chat with you while you are online.

The Facebook "wall" is where it all happens. This is where you write comments on what you are up to and share video, photos and articles with your fans. You can also see what your fans are posting on their walls, and anyone on your fan list can come by and write a comment on your wall. Facebook is a place where conversations can be started and feedback can come from everyone on your fan list.

Should you have a facebook page also? Yes, if you choose. Many people have both. If you'd like, you can limit your personal facebook page access to family and close friends by removing your page from the search engines and keep everything private.

How do I get my music on my facebook fan page?

Building profile on Reverbnation.com and follow the steps to link it to your page. Your music player from Reverbnation will appear on your fanpage allowing people to check out your music.

My Space

MySpace allows people to connect with their friends and make new ones. Users on MySpace have a personal page where they can post information about themselves, pictures, music, video clips and other information. You can also create a blog which entries are displayed on your personal page. Having a presence on MySpace will allow you to interact with existing friends, as well as giving you a platform to meet new friends.

Using MySpace is easy. Simply sign up for an account following the steps below and start connecting with your friends and making new ones.

For adding friends, you can search by location, gender, age and other categories and solicit people. It's not talked about a lot, but a lot of bands use friend adders which is a software that automatically does the search and sends out friend requests. MySpace frowns on the use of this software.

Twitter

Twitter gives an immediate pulse on news and events, and what people are talking about, often before any news outlet. Twitter is the “office water cooler” and offers your audience direct access to you in real-time. It also broadens your reach to a wider world-wide community.

Twitter is a social messaging platform and micro-blog. It’s like texting and is a great place for keeping people informed on what you are up to without the need to spend a lot of time crafting an entire post on the subject. You just say what's up and leave it at that.

With the ability to follow people and have followers, and the ability to access Twitter on your cell phone, Twitter has become the perfect social messaging tool. Whether you are out touring and want to keep your fans posted of your travels, or keeping people informed of new music, Twitter is a great tool for quickly communicating a message to a group of people.

YouTube

YouTube is an interactive worldwide community—there are a lot of ways to use the platform to inform people, get them to participate, and grow awareness of your band and your music.

- Reach Out. Post videos that get YouTube viewers talking, and then stay in the conversation with comments and video responses.
- Partner Up. Find other organizations on YouTube who complement your mission, and work together to promote each other.
- Keep It Fresh. Put up new videos regularly and keep them short—ideally under 5 minutes.
- Spread Your Message. Share links and the embed code for your videos with supporters so they can help get the word out.
- Be Genuine. YouTube has a wide demographic, so high view counts come from content that's compelling, rather than what's "hip."

Connecting Everything Together

The next step, once you have created your profiles on these sites is to work them. Start connecting with your friends, your fans and others. You can't just build a profile and let it sit unattended. You must begin interacting with people and posting things of interest to your fans on a regular basis. It is a two-way street. Fans get to share their feedback and to take a small part in your music life. That's what they want – the opportunity to share themselves, their feelings and their thoughts with you. Welcome them and make them part of your music life.

All of the social network sites link to each other in some way so if you post on YouTube, it will appear on Facebook. Or, if you post on Facebook, it will automatically post on Twitter, etc. Check your profile settings on each site to establish the connections.

One web dashboard that you can use to make one post and have it disseminate everywhere is <http://Ping.fm>.

With blogging and all of the social networks you are on, your job becomes growing your fanbase by keeping them interested and coming back for more. Post information about the music, your adventures, your travels, your gigs, events in your life, etc. Even mention things that are important to your fans on a personal basis. Anything to keep them coming back and to let them know that you also care about them.

Create Your Own Social Network

Places like Ning.com and KickApps.com allow you to build your own social community – your personal fan club. Why not? It allows people to stay informed on band happenings and to participate by uploading their own information and photos. If they are having a good time on your site, they will bring their friends and the viral marketing will continue to spread.

From here you can sell your music, posters, tshirts, etc.

What about all the Indie Sites that Charge a Fee for Marketing?

There are thousands of them out there on the internet. Do a search and decide if there are places out there that offer services that you need. Just remember, their goal is to make money first and market you second. Their services are fee-based. Decide for yourself what you are willing to pay for and what you are not willing to pay for.

Learn More About Internet Marketing

There are people out there who make a full time job of staying up to date with internet trends and information. Search, find and subscribe to those blogs to stay in the know. There are hundreds of them out there. Here are a few suggestions:
